Marriage In Picardy.

A Picardy custom, founded on a broad basis of common sense as well as the idea of complete partnership, is that which puts a new bride through a kind of examination in the trade of her husband. It may, of course, have become something of a burlesque, and the bride may purposely show less dexterity than she need. Still, the consideration of the wife as a helpmate is very clearly shown in the performance. If the young wife's husband be a farmer, she will be asked to harness a horse and cart and to harrow a small piece of land. If her choice has fallen on an ironworker, she must hammer a piece of iron; if on a miller, she must measure out wheat from a basket at the church door; if on a smith, she is supposed to be able to strike the anvil; if on a sailor, she has to clean and mend some netting, and so on with the other occupations. Evidently the keeping of an idle wife is not understood in Picardy.-T. P.'s London Weekly.

Whale and Elephant Meat. There is something unpleasant about the thought of eating whale meat, but it is said that the reality is very palatable. Japan has quite a trade in canned and salted whale meat, and there is to be a campaign to educate the European peoples to like it. Some whaling companies have distributed from their headquarters samples of canned whale meat, and those who have eaten it describe it as tenderer than beef and much like it in taste. Whale steak seems no queerer than Frankfort sausage made out of an elephant, which is what some German people have been eating. An enterprising butcher over there, hearing that an unruly elephant in the Ghent zoological gardens was to be killed. engaged the carcass. He made 3,800 pounds of sausage out of it and sold every pound at good prices.

The Monkey and the Pie. An Indian faker had a monkey that he had brought up from babyhood, says an English writer. The pair were fast friends, the monkey being a faithful attendant on his master and as good as a watchdog. One day the aker made a pie for dinner and left t to cook on a charcoal fire while he went for a walk. As the cooking profor the monkey. It raised the crust and tasted the chicken. Finding the food very tasty, it are more and more until nothing but the crust remained Then it remembered its master, who the ground as if dead. By and by a erow came along and pecked at the feathers, placed it in pieces in the and then contentedly awaited the return of the faker, to whom the whole incident was related by an eyewitness.
